

Visual Schedules Using Unique Formats

Children respond to and interact differently with their visual schedules. Here is an example where a pill box creates a natural first...then pattern of reminders. This could be used to show then activities inside the boxes, to contain tokens for completion, or to contain reminder objects to be take to the next location.

A flip chart format may work well for some children and can be sized to be easily portable. This example is created to mark activities specific to the Christmas Day routine. It's easy to imagine adjusting the cards on a ring for a variety of circumstances.

This schedule mimics the clock dial and allows the child to mark the activity they are involved with by spinning the arrow.
